

Want to give even better customer service to international visitors?

This is the course your business needs.

London receives 13 million international visitors every single year, spending billions of pounds at hotels, in restaurants, on the high street, at tourist attractions and on transport. 'Welcoming the World' is an exciting new initiative aimed at businesses who want to make the most of this huge opportunity.

Are you getting your share of their business?

With the 2012 Games coming up, numbers of visitors to London are going to increase even more. You and your staff will not have the same cultural background as many overseas customers – and you won't always speak the same language. This course will help you and your customer service team to understand cultural differences and improve the way you communicate – increasing your sales, customer satisfaction and repeat business.

Do your frontline staff really speak your customer's language?

We can't make you and your staff fluent in every language that every visitor to London speaks. But we will help you learn useful phrases for key groups of customers, so you can go that extra mile. Our course gives every participant a free phrasebook and links to cultural briefings on 11 countries – plus cultural and language training for Russia and Japan.

Interested?

Our course takes place on 7 May 2009 between 09.30 and 16:15 at the Heathrow Academy. Read on to find out more and book your place NOW!
